George D. Baker, who is featured in the role of Grenfall Lorry, the ideal American in George Barr McCutch-eon's play of "Graustark," or "A Love Bollind a Throne," is an actor of wide experience who made his professional debut several years ago playing leading leading juveniles with Walker Whiteside, and later gained valuable experience as the leading man of the Bush Templs theater, Chicago, and Metropolitan theater, Minneapolis framatic stock companies afterward He later played important roles with Mary Shaw, E. S. Williard and other prominent stars, attracting the atten-tion of William A. Brady and Jos. R.

According to the critics, Mr. Baker is the ideal Grenfall Lorry, giving the part that depth and touch of comedy which is so ably depicted in the character in the book, and also possessing the ability and requisite temperament to portray the sentiment, love scenes and strong dramatic climaxes in an artistic manner.

Mr. Baker is a native of Chicago, and possessing the theoretical that the ordered the theoretical control of the control of trated Songs.

A most interesting picture shown at this popular theater last evening was the one entitled The Octoroon, and feals with race conditions in the south furing slavery days. The costuming of the characters is most accurate, and the scenery of that particular locality is most clearly shown, giving one a very excellent idea of the conditions and characteristics of both races of this section. This is a very long film and the story is told very completely.

while the interest is retained until the very last moment, when the story is ended very satisfactorily. Another picture dealing with conditions of a different sort in the south is the one entitled The Feud and the Turkey, and is a story of heart interest, utilizing as it does the love affairs of two children of two opposing factions, with the natural opposition to such. The Poor Singing Girl is a story of a street singer, and gives the audience a chance to become acquainted with the home conditions of a street singer and the varied incidents relative thereto. The comic field is covered by the two films entitled The Swimming Lesson and the Poster Chase; these have fairly convulsed the large audiences that have bene present at each performance.
